Written Testimony of Attorney General Mark J. Bennett before the Hawaii Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission, on August 20, 2007

Good afternoon Chair Lilly, and members of the Hawaii Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to address this very important matter.

I will refer to the bill before us, the Native Hawaiian Government Reorganization Act of 2007, S.310, as the "Akaka Bill," in honor of its chief author and only Native Hawaiian Senator. The Akaka Bill, in a nutshell, provides long overdue federal recognition to Native Hawaiians, a recognition that has been extended for decades to other Native Americans and Alaska Natives. It provides Native Hawaiians with a limited self-governing structure designed to restore a small measure of self-determination. American Indians and Alaska Natives have long maintained a significant degree of self-governing power over their affairs, and the Akaka Bill simply extends that long overdue privilege to Native Hawaiians.

The claim that the Akaka Bill creates some sort of unique race-based government at odds with our constitutional and congressional heritage contradicts Congress's longstanding recognition of other native peoples, including American Indians, and Alaska Natives, and the Supreme Court's virtually complete deference to Congress's decisions on such matters. It is for Congress to exercise its best judgment on matters of recognition of native peoples. Although some have expressed constitutional concerns, those fears are unjustified. Neither Congress nor the Commission should let unwarranted fears of judicial overreaching curb our Nation's responsibility to fulfill its unique obligation to this country's native peoples.

The Constitution gives Congress broad latitude to recognize native groups, and the Supreme Court has declared that it is for Congress, and not the courts, to decide which native peoples will be recognized, and to what extent. The only limitation is that Congress may not act "arbitrarily" in recognizing an Indian tribe. United States v. Sandoval.[1] Because Native Hawaiians, like other Native Americans and Alaska Natives, are the indigenous aboriginal people of land ultimately subsumed within the expanding U.S. frontier, it cannot possibly be arbitrary to provide recognition to Native Hawaiians. Indeed, because Native Hawaiians are not only indigenous, but also share with other Native Americans a similar history of dispossession, cultural disruption, and loss of full self-determination, it would be "arbitrary," in a logical sense, to not recognize Native Hawaiians.

[1] 231 U.S. 28, 46 (1913).

The Supreme Court has never in its history struck down any decision by the Congress to recognize a native people. And the Akaka Bill certainly gives the Court no reason to depart from that uniform jurisprudential deference to Congress's decisions over Indian affairs. The Supreme Court long ago stated that "Congress possesses the broad power of legislating for the protection of the Indians wherever they may be," United States v. McGowan,[2] "whether within its original territory or territory subsequently acquired." Sandoval, 231 U.S. at 46.

Critics, including the Commission in its report last year (over two vigorous dissenting opinions), wrongly contend that the Akaka Bill creates a race-based government. In fact, the fundamental criterion for participation in the Native Hawaiian Governing Entity is being a descendant of the native indigenous people of the Hawaiian Islands, a status Congress has itself characterized as being non-racial. For example, Congress has expressly stated that in establishing the many existing benefit programs for Native Hawaiians it was "not extend[ing] services to Native Hawaiians because of their race, but because of their unique status as the indigenous people . . . as to whom the United States has established a trust relationship."[3] Thus, Congress does not view programs for Native Hawaiians as being "race-based" at all. Accordingly, a Native Hawaiian Governing Entity by and for Native Hawaiians would similarly not constitute a "race-based" government.

This is not just clever word play, but is rooted in decades of consistent United States Supreme Court precedent. The key difference between the category Native Hawaiians and other racial groups, is that Native Hawaiians, like Native Americans and Alaska Natives, are the aboriginal indigenous people of their geographic region. All other racial groups in this country are simply not native to this country. And because of their native indigenous status, and the power granted the

---

[2] 302 U.S. 535, 539 (1938).

[3] See, e.g., Hawaiian Homelands Homeownership Act of 2000, Pub. L. No. 106-568, Section 202(13)(B).

Congress under the Indian Commerce Clause, Native Hawaiians, like Native Americans and Alaska Natives, have been recognized by Congress as having a special political relationship with the United States.

The suggestions in the Commission's report that the Supreme Court in Rice v. Cayetano[4] found the category consisting of Native Hawaiians to be "race-based" under the Fourteenth Amendment and unconstitutional are simply wrong. The Supreme Court's decision was confined to the limited and special context of Fifteenth Amendment voting rights, and, importantly, made no distinction whatsoever between Native Hawaiians and other Native Americans.

Furthermore, Congress has already recognized Native Hawaiians to a large degree, by repeatedly singling out Native Hawaiians for special treatment, either uniquely, or in concert with other Native Americans, and by acknowledging on many occasions a "special relationship" with, and trust obligation to, Native Hawaiians. In fact, Congress has expressly stated more than once that "the political status of Native Hawaiians is comparable to that of American Indians."[5] The Akaka Bill simply takes this recognition one step further, by providing Native Hawaiians with the means to reorganize a formal self-governing entity, something Native Americans and Native Alaskans have had for decades.

Some opponents of the bill, including the Commission in its report last year, have noted that Hawaiians no longer have an existing governmental structure with which to engage in a formal government-to-government relationship with the United States. That objection is not only misguided and self-contradictory, but directly refuted by the Supreme Court's Lara decision[6] just 3 years ago. It is misguided because Native Hawaiians do not have a self-governing structure today only because the United States participated in the elimination of that governing entity, by helping to facilitate the overthrow of the Hawaiian Kingdom, and later annexing the Hawaiian Islands. Unlike other Native

---

[4] 528 U.S. 495 (2000).

[5] See, e.g., Native Hawaiian Education Act, 20 U.S.C. § 7512(12)(D); Hawaiian Homelands Homeownership Act of 2000, Pub. L. No. 106-568, Section 202(13)(D).

[6] United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193 (2004).

Americans who were allowed to retain some measure of sovereignty, Congress did not leave Native Hawaiians with any sovereignty whatsoever. It cannot be that the United States's complete destruction of Hawaiian self-governance would be the reason Congress would be precluded from ameliorating the consequences of its own actions by trying to restore a small measure of sovereignty to the Native Hawaiian people.

The objection is also self-contradictory because one of the very purposes and objects of the Akaka Bill is to allow Native Hawaiians to reconstitute a governmental structure in place of the one they earlier lost. Thus, once the bill is passed, and the Native Hawaiian Governing Entity formed, the United States would be able to have a government-to-government relationship with that entity.

Finally, and very importantly, the objection violates the Supreme Court's recent Lara decision, in which the Court acknowledged Congress' ability to "restore[] previously extinguished tribal status--by re-recognizing a Tribe whose tribal existence it previously had terminated."[7] Indeed, Lara single-handedly eliminates this constitutional objection to the Akaka Bill, by recognizing Congress's ability to restore tribal status to a people who had been entirely stripped of their self-governing structure.

Those who say that Native Hawaiians do not fall within Congress's power to deal specially with "Indian Tribes" because Native Hawaiians are not "Indian Tribes," are simply wrong. For the term "Indian," at the time of the framing of the Constitution, simply referred to the aboriginal "inhabitants of our Frontiers."[8] And the term "tribe" at that time simply meant "a distinct body of people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic."[9] Native Hawaiians easily fit within both definitions.[10]

---

[7] 541 U.S. at 203.

[8] Declaration of Independence paragraph 29 (1776); see also Thomas Jefferson, Notes on the State of Virginia 100 (William Peden ed. 1955)(1789) (referring to Indians as "aboriginal inhabitants of America"). Indeed, Captain Cook and his crew called the Hawaiian Islanders who greeted their ships in 1778 "Indians." See 1 Ralph S. Kuykendall, The Hawaiian Kingdom at 14 (1968) (quoting officer journal).

Finally, the Commission's report suggests that because the government of the Kingdom of Hawaii was itself not racially exclusive, it would be inappropriate to recognize a governing entity limited to Native Hawaiians. This objection is absurd. The fact that Native Hawaiians over one hundred years ago, whether by choice or coercion, maintained a government that was open to participation by non-Hawaiians, should not deprive Native Hawaiians today of the recognition they deserve. Indeed, it is quite ironic that those who oppose the Akaka Bill because they believe it contradicts our nation's commitment to equal rights and racial harmony would use the historical inclusiveness of the Kingdom of Hawaii, allowing non-Hawaiians to participate in their government, as a reason to deny Native Hawaiians the recognition other native groups receive.[11] Furthermore, American Indian tribes have often included non-Indians within their tribes, too, yet non-Indian tribal members have been permissibly

---

[9] Thomas Sheridan, A Complete Dictionary of the English Language (2d ed. 1789).

[10] Some opponents of the Akaka Bill argue that including all Native Hawaiians, regardless of blood quantum, is unconstitutional, citing the concurring opinion of Justices Breyer and Souter in Rice v. Cayetano. 528 U.S. at 524. But that opinion did not find constitutional fault with including all Native Hawaiians of any blood quantum provided that was the choice of the tribe, and not the state. Id. at 527. Because the Akaka Bill gives Native Hawaiians the ability to select for themselves the membership criteria for "citizenship" within the Native Hawaiian government, no constitutional problem arises.

[11] The same irony underlies the objection that Native Hawaiians should not be given recognition because they are not a fully segregated group within the Hawaiian Islands but are often integrated within Hawaii society at large, and sometimes marry outside their race. Those concerned about promoting racial equality and harmony should be rewarding Native Hawaiians for such inclusive behavior, or as we say in Hawaii, their "aloha" for people of all races, rather than using it against them. In any event, American Indians, too, have intermarried--at rates as high as 50% or more--and often venture beyond reservation borders, and yet those facts do not prevent them or their descendants from receiving federal recognition.

excluded from having special status. See, e.g., U.S. v. Rogers, 45 U.S. 567, 572-73 (1846) (white person adopted into tribe may not avoid prosecution under exception for crimes committed by Indians against Indians in Indian country).

In short, there is simply no legal distinction between Native Hawaiians and American Indians or Alaska Natives, that would justify denying Native Hawaiians the same treatment other Native American groups in this country currently enjoy. The Commission's report last year simply ignores this country's longstanding practice of dealing specially with its native peoples. It ignores the undisputed history of suffering, and political and cultural devastation foisted upon the Native Hawaiian people.[12] And under the guise of lessening discrimination, it ironically ends up effecting the most patent discrimination by denying the Native Hawaiian people the recognition and self-governing structure that virtually all other native peoples have had for decades. Indeed, the report's reasoning poses a threat to American Indians and Alaska Natives as well, which perhaps explains in part why these groups strongly support the Akaka Bill.

The Akaka Bill, under any reasonable reading of the Constitution and decisions of the Supreme Court, is constitutional, just as is the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act for Alaska Natives, and the Indian Reorganization Act for American Indian tribes--both of which assured their respective native peoples some degree of self-governance. The Supreme [12] The suggestion by some, including the Center for Equal Opportunity, that other minority groups have also suffered historical wrongs, misses the point. It is absurd to compare Native Hawaiians, the aboriginal indigenous people of this country, with other non-native minority groups who voluntarily immigrated to the United States. To equate Native Hawaiians, who did not choose to be overtaken by the United States -- and who suffered immeasurable harm from the resulting destruction of their culture, their sovereignty, and the taking of their native lands -- to immigrants who voluntarily sought to become Americans, and who voluntarily left their ancestral homelands, is preposterous.

---

Furthermore, the objection that other minority groups have suffered, too, would apply equally to recognition of Native Americans and Alaska Natives, too, yet these critics inexplicably single out Native Hawaiians alone for this objection.

Court, as noted earlier, has made clear that Congress's power to recognize native peoples is virtually unreviewable.

Native Hawaiians are not asking for privileged treatment— they are simply asking to be treated the same way all other native indigenous Americans are treated in this country. Congress long ago afforded American Indians and Alaska Natives formal recognition. The Akaka Bill would simply provide Native Hawaiians comparable recognition, as the indigenous peoples of the Hawaiian Islands. Formal recognition will help preserve the language, identity, and culture of Native Hawaiians, just as it has for American Indians throughout the past century, and Alaska Natives for decades. To use the poignant words Justice Jackson employed 60 years ago: "The generations of [Native people] who suffered the privations, indignities, and brutalities of the westward march . . . have gone . . . , and nothing that we can do can square the account with them. Whatever survives is a moral obligation . . . to do for the descendants of the [Native people] what in the conditions of this twentieth century is the decent thing."[13]

The Akaka Bill will finally give official and long overdue recognition to Native Hawaiians' inherent right of self-determination, and help them overcome, as the United States Supreme Court in Rice put it, their loss of a "culture and way of life." The Akaka Bill would yield equality for all of this great country's native peoples, and in the process ensure justice for all.

As the Attorney General of Hawaii, I respectfully ask that you support this important legislation.

---

[13] Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians v. United States, 324 U.S. 335, 355 (1945) (Jackson, J., concurring).

The commission report also expresses concern that there is nothing to ensure that the Native Hawaiian Governing Entity will protect civil rights. In fact, the Secretary of the Interior must certify that civil rights are protected before certifying the organic governing documents. S.310 Section 7(c)(4)(A)(vi).

Nor would passage of the Akaka Bill reduce funding for other native groups, who, it should be noted, overwhelmingly support the bill.